Proper Fly Control Eliminates Disease

Proper Equipment and Application Important

Many diseases and cases of contamination are traceable to flies. Spraying with DDT and other new chemicals presents the first truly effective means of controlling flies.

DDT is amazingly effective for several weeks. Flies landing on treated surfaces die in a few minutes from a condition similar to delirium tremens. The main steps to a good fly control program are:

First: Clean up the breeding places where flies lay their eggs.

Second: Spray DDT on all surfaces where flies gather. For this work a sprayer developing some pressure is needed. A garden type compressed air or larger sprayer will do the job efficiently. Around the home, spray the doors, windows, the back porch, out buildings, et cetera. On the farm, the ceilings and walls of barns, poultry houses and hog houses should be sprayed. Two or three sprayings a year will provide excellent control.

DDT is positive but slow in its action. Dairymen still are using hand sprayers for a quick knockdown of visiting flies at milking time. The hand sprayers also are convenient for spraying again those areas exposed to rain, where DDT may be washed off.

The types of sprayers for fly control include: (1) hand atomizers; (2) hand pump action — knapsack, wheelbarrow, and bucket pump sprayers; (3) compressed air—usually 2 to 4 gallons in size; (4) engine-operated sprayers from ½ to 1½ H.P. up in size. At least one of each type should be available.

WORDS TO WATCH

Program. Avoid "pro-grum" or "pro-gr'm." Rhyme -gram with tram, exactly as in diagram and monogram.

Coupon. Not "kew" as in kewpie, but "koo" as in coupe. Say: KOO-pon.

Kilometer. Do not accent the second syllable. Accent the first and fourth, as: KIL'oh-MEE-ter.

Percolater. The second syllable, -co-, does not spell "kew." Say: PER'koe-LAY-ter.

Precedence. Do not "press" the first syllable. Think of the word precede, and accent the second syllable, thus: pree-SEE-dence.

Theater. Not "thee-AY-ter"—it is dialectal. Accent the first syllable only: THEE-uh-ter.

Airplane. There is no such word as "air-o-plane." Say AIR-plane.

Inventors Tell of Latest in Gadgets

Women Found Percolating Brain Children.

CHICAGO. — The question "What's New?" has more than 60 answers, according to a new digest-style magazine. They are contained among ideas listed in the Digest of New Inventions, published by National Foundation for Science and Industry.

Alfred R. Babcock, who launched the foundation a year ago as a non profit clearing house to help bring inventor and manufacturer together, reported inventions flowed in from every state, Canada, Panama Canal zone and Guam.

Women, Babcock noted, are percolating brain children just as are the men.

Mrs. Ida Mae Price of Marked Tree, Ark., submitted a combination ashtray and cuspidor for cigar smokers in the home.

Mrs. Anna G. Besch, Bellwood, Neb., invented a lunch kit with a spill-proof bowl so husband and children could have hot soup with their lunch.

As for the men, Charles Berwinkle, Raven Rock, W. Va., invented a mobile worktable-chair unit for wounded veterans and invalids.

W. G. Bolcom, Duluth, Minn., offered an automatic somersaulter. It "imparts to the user the benefits of turning somersaults without the inconvenience, the difficulty or the physical effort of the normal manner."

A new kind of shower bath attachment sent in by A. V. Richardson, Dorchester, Mass., would give the bather scented, softened, readylathered or clear water as desired.

Then there were a foolproof safety pin, a nail with a breakable head for simple removal of the nailed object, a rotary windshield wiper for automobiles and trucks, a plant vitamin hypodermic for use in the garden, a two-minute electric dishwasher, a new kind of camera for taking three-dimensional pictures, and hundreds of others.

Only patented items or those with patents applied for could be accepted for publication in the digest, Babcock said.

New Fire Engine For Town Arrives

Appomattox's new fire engine arrived Tuesday, after having been on order for several months. The engine will be housed in a recently completed addition to the town's cinder block fire house.

Volunteer firemen took the new engine out for a "trial run" last night.

The new engine, the housing for it, and other incidental expenses, ran to a cost of around $8,000, which sum the town borrowed for this purpose.

It is understood that the town's old fire engine will be retained for emergency use.

Richmond, July 9. (Special to Times-Virginian)- The State Highway Department reported this week that 59 miles along secondary school bus routes in Appomattox County were hard surfaced, reconditioned, retreated or otherwise improved during the fiscal year which ended on June 30.

The Statewide secondary road improvement program, intensified during fiscal '47 at the special request of the General Assembly and championed by Governor Tuck, was hailed by the State's Chief Executive as "more than gratifying."The Governor warned, however, that "we have a tremendous job ahead."

Expending a total of $169,510.00 in Appomattox, the Higway Department reported the following work done on the county's secondary roads during the year:

Maintenance replacements - 16.- 8 miles reconditioned and-or resurfaced; 6.85 miles received bituminous retreatment; 98 miles of heavy shoulder and ditch work carried out; and 10 secondary bridges repaired. Total cost was $44,102.00. Routine maintenance costs ran to $49,215.00.

New construction - 48.10 miles were graded or reconditioned; 52.-30 miles were surfaced or stabilized; 1.30 miles were hard surfaced for the first time. Total cost was $76,192.00.

Secondary improvement in Virginia came into the limelight with the 1946 General Assembly, which imposed an additional one cent tax on gasoline for secondary road work and resolved that the Highway Department should "expedite the improvement of those roads . . . which are not travelable during all reasons of the year; and further, that in such improvement preference be given to those roads serving as school bus routes and rural free delivery mail routes."

Commenting on the year's work, Governor Tuck termed the progress "more than gratifying."

"We have a tremendous job ahead, however," he added, "and I Trust that the people of Virginia will bear with us as the Highway Department continues toward its goal of 'getting Virginia out of the mud.'"

P. M. Burton, highway department resident engineer at Appomattox, commented that the chief accomplishments during the past year consisted of small stabilization projects scattered throughout the county.

"This work has been of immense benefit to the operation of school buses and mail service," he commented, "as well as to the general public."
